Art and Inclusion

2015–2023
When I arrived at the High in 2015, the museum faced a difficult truth: an exceptional collection and world-class architecture could not exclusively make us essential within the diverse and growing city that we call home. That realization forced us to change. We embraced inclusivity as a value and as a measurable objective.

This report both underscores the very real adaptation of our culture and points to gaps and shortcomings. In other words, while it marks our progress, it more importantly establishes a new baseline to guide the museum’s ongoing dialogue about what’s next.

We certainly do not have all the answers. We understand that there is progress that is not “graphable.” And we’re aware that we’ve not achieved the full measure of change to which we aspire.

However, we will continue steadfastly toward our goal of being a place where all Atlanta is comfortable coming together. Achieving that will take continuous focus and the relentless reinforcement of inclusivity as integral to everything we do.

Rand Suffolk
Director
From 2015 to 2020, the High increased its Black, Indigenous, people of color (BIPOC) participation from 15% in 2015 to 51% in 2020, a 240% increase. Over the last six years, we have averaged 52% in BIPOC audience participation. We have made a conscious effort to ensure that our audience reflects the diverse makeup of Metro Atlanta communities by intentionally presenting diverse exhibitions, increasing community access, establishing and continuing unique partnerships, and developing interesting programming.

From FY11 through FY15, 32% of exhibitions featured women artists, artists of color, and LGBTQIA+ artists. Since FY16, we redoubled our efforts, increasing our presentation of exhibitions featuring women artists, artists of color, and LGBTQIA+ artists to an annual average of 61%.

Exhibitions

FY23 | 1,224 total works on view in the collection

QUICK NOTE
This represents accessioned works only and includes works in special exhibitions and permanent collection gallery rotations. African works attributed to a group or culture are counted as one unique artist per object. All works by unidentified artists are counted as male. These numbers represent artworks on view, not accessioned artists. Some artists had multiple works on view.
Acquisitions

The following historical data shows acquisitions from two perspectives: total number of works purchased and total cost of works purchased. To gain a comprehensive overview of this data, it is important to toggle between both charts. For example, between FY17 and FY19, artists of color represented on average 32% of the funds annually expended to purchase new works. However, during that same time period, those same acquisitions represented on average 52% of the total number of works acquired each year.

QUICK NOTE
Funding for acquisitions comes from two sources: dedicated endowment funds and cash donations. There is no requirement that endowment funds be spent in the year they are generated; hence, the museum may strategically pool funds over multiple years to support more significant investments at a future date. Donations of art (i.e., gifts, bequests) are not represented in the numbers displayed.

QUICK NOTE
In FY21, pandemic-related financial uncertainty caused us to impose a moratorium on acquisitions. Consequently, we consider FY21 unreportable.
Since its inception in 2005, the Driskell Prize has annually recognized an early- to midcareer African American scholar or artist whose work makes an original and important contribution to the field of African American art or art history. The endowment for Driskell, which boasts just over a million dollars for the acquisition of African American artwork, has supported the purchase of 50 works by African American artists and awarded cumulative gifts of $500,000 to past recipients.

Quick Note

As of FY23, the museum employed approximately 158 staff. The data provided excludes approximately 45 security and janitorial staff, which are provided by independent third-party vendors.

Quick Note

The Driskell Dinner was canceled in 2020 due to the COVID-19 pandemic.
Mellon Undergraduate Curatorial Fellowship Program

In 2012, the High was named an original partnering institution of the Andrew W. Mellon Undergraduate Curatorial Fellowship Program. The program increased diversity in the curatorial field by mentoring undergraduate students who have an interest in pursuing curatorial studies. The Mellon program supported a two-year paid fellowship ($20,000 for full two-year fellowship). As of 2023, thirteen students have been assigned to the High, and several have been hired in various disciplines within the museum.

AUC Art Collective

In 2019, the High joined the Atlanta University Center Collective for the Study of Art History and Curatorial Studies. The collective’s goal is to extend the talent pipeline and further the important work of diversifying the field of curatorial studies with high school students. In partnership with the Early College Programs in Art History and Curatorial Studies at Spelman, the High supports rising junior and senior students of color to pursue undergraduate studies in art history and curatorial studies.

Talent Pipeline

The High is 1 of 6 participants in the Mellon Curatorial Program.

Teen Team

The Teen Team is a diverse group of junior and senior high school students who work at the museum as paid employees to gain knowledge and experience in various disciplines of the museum. The Teen Team program is nationally regarded as a competitive program for teens who may be interested in the arts. Each year, at least two Teen Team seniors are offered Posse Scholarships, which cover full tuition and board to some of the nation’s top universities.

Quick Note

The 2020–2021 Teen Team was canceled due to the COVID-19 pandemic.
Board of Directors

While progress has been made in diversifying board representation by age and gender, further diversification by ethnicity is a strategic priority and area for improvement.

Docents

Over the last five years, the High’s docent corps has steadily and successfully increased its recruitment efforts to invite people of color to act as art ambassadors for the museum.

Quick Note: There was no docent candidate class in 2020, 2021, and 2022 due to the COVID-19 pandemic and the absence of school groups.
